Dayo Ogunyemi is a partner in 234 Media, a firm that makes principal and private equity investments in the media, entertainment and technology sectors in Africa. He also serves as a partner of CAG/EMC Matrix, which provides advisory services to private and public sector clients.

Mr. Ogunyemi's career has spanned a decade and a half and has covered finance, intellectual property and transactional matters with a particular focus on media, entertainment and technology. His work as a financier, strategy consultant and attorney has been honed by more than a decade of advisory and operational experience in the media and technology sectors, including employment with Booz Allen & Hamilton, Sony Music Entertainment Inc., Bertelsmann Music Group, and Weil Gotshal and Manges LLP.

He has represented and provided legal and strategic advice to artists, entrepreneurs, and companies in the film, music, publishing, and fashion industries in the United States, Nigeria, the United Kingdom, and South Africa. He has also advised governments and regional economic communities in Africa on policy and regulatory matters relating to intellectual property and technology.

In 2005, he led a project with the UN Economic Commission on Africa (ECA) to develop a harmonized legal and regulatory framework for e-commerce, ICT and intellectual property for the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). He also worked with the Ghanaian government on developing legislation and policy to complement Ghana's e-strategy for utilizing ICT in socio-economic development.

He served as a member of the African Technical Advisory Committee for the UN ECA's African Information Society Initiative. He founded Naijanet, the first Nigerian internet community, in 1991 and served in 1993 as a coordinator for the Fund for Democratic Elections in South Africa (FDESA).

Mr. Ogunyemi is a Beta Gamma Sigma graduate of Columbia Business School where he earned an MBA. He also holds a Jurist Doctor from Columbia Law School, and an SB from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is admitted to practice law in New York.
