13.00 – 15.00 Lunch break

15.00 – 16.00 Panel 3: AI – Gyro Gearloose or Little Helper? What’s an AI invention?

Intended as a recap of Session 2 of the WIPO Conversation and to provide common understanding and basis for more detailed discussions. What is an AI invention: an invention which was made with the help of AI (AI-assisted), an invention made by AI (AI-generated), a new AI model or even an invention that incorporates the use of AI? The panel will consider the roles of humans and AI, the interplay between the two, the different scenarios and why this matters for defining the right questions for the patent system.

Moderator: Prof. Shlomit Yanisky-Ravid, Visiting Professor, Fordham Law School; Yale Law School, Information Society Project, Fellow; Founder and Academic Director, Shalom Comparative Research Institute, Faculty of Law, Ono Academic College, Israel

Speakers: Prof. Michelle Azuaje Pirela, Director of the AI and Law Research Group, Universidad Autónoma de Chile, Chile

11.40 - 11.55  Presentation: Fostering an AI ecosystem supporting local innovation

AI raises many different questions for IP. This presentation seeks to provide an insight into why taking into account local factors and applying a local lens may be key in shaping a thriving AI ecosystem and to open the floor for the sharing session.

Speaker: Mr. Arthur Gwagwa, Doctoral Researcher, Utrecht University, Netherlands
11.55 – 13.00  Sharing session: How are Member States and IP Offices supporting and fostering innovation in the AI field; and how are they closing the technology gap and shaping regulatory frameworks for innovations in the AI field (Member States / IP Offices) (presentations / open floor)

IP plays a central role in fostering innovation but it is often unclear how to approach the many questions raised by AI innovations.

Many Member States and IP Offices are seeking ways to foster innovation in the AI field, to close the technology gap and to encourage economic growth. Approaches include national AI strategies, studies, public consultations, amendments to examination guidelines and current IP Office practices, publication of guides and resources for innovators relating to innovations in the AI field.

This sharing session is intended to illustrate national approaches, exchange views about the questions and challenges faced by and information about options available to Member States when starting to consider fostering innovation in the AI and IP space.
