Growing Demand for IP Rights: The European Example

1/3 of European jobs rely on IP-intensive industries, said recent report published by the EPO and OHIM. The paper titled Intellectual Property Rights intensive industries: contribution to economic performance and employment in Europe, reported that some 77 million jobs come from industries that have a higher than average use of IP...

EPO Launched Russian-English Machine Translation for Patents

The European Patent Office (EPO) has added Russian to its free machine translation service, Patent Translate. Meeting in Geneva yesterday, the heads of the Federal Service for Intellectual Property of the Russian Federation (Rospatent), the European Patent Office (EPO)...

WIPO Adds China Patent Collection to Online Database

WIPO has added China's national patent collection to the searchable PATENTSCOPE database, pushing the service past the 30 million record mark and increasing it to 34 national and regional patent collections. For further details, please check...

The full study analyzed patents, trademarks, designs and geographical indications. Reported figures clearly show that the benefit of patents and other IP rights is not just economic theory but business reality.

The study is the first of its kind to measure the impact of IP rights on the European economy. Among other factors, it considers GDP, employment, wages and trade, and finds that about half of all EU industries are IPR-intensive.
